A Significant Cultural Find Made by FWFN's Environmental Team

---

As many of you know, Fort William First Nation's Economic Development Unit has an Environmental Team – the Resource Management Response Unit – which includes an archaeological component. Faith Johnstone, our Lead Monitor and Field Technician, has been working this week with project partners at the Central Avenue Ball Diamonds on Harbour Expressway.

Today, at this site, Faith and the Northwest Heritage Team made what is classified as a significant find – a complete arrowhead. This is the first time our team has discovered a complete arrowhead in four years of doing this work.

The fact that this was found in the heart of “City Central” speaks volumes about the importance of the work our young people are doing to recover destroyed and lost cultural heritage.

It also reinforces the need for our Nation to continue working with the City in exercising our Inherent Treaty Rights – especially in the recovery of these cultural items.

It also serves as a reminder of why it's important for us to voice our concerns and advocate for the protection of cultural heritage and the right of Indigenous communities to exercise their Treaty Rights on the land – especially in the face of provincial decisions that may limit these efforts.

The next step is to have the artifact analyzed and dated. Once complete, it will be returned to the community for safekeeping.

We are proud to share this exciting discovery with our community, especially in light of all that has been lost in recent decades, years, and even weeks.

On a personal note, we are incredibly proud of our young Band Members — Faith, Emerson, Bobbi Lee, and Keri — who show up each day to protect, recover, and preserve the environmental and cultural heritage our community holds dear. Well done!

Miigwetch,
The Economic Development Team

August

August is a time of harvest.
Mother Earth gives us these gifts:
food, beauty, and lessons.

It's a time to be thankful and to share.

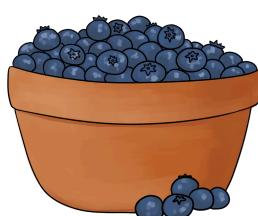

Our teachings remind us to live in balance, with nature, with others, and with ourselves.

Everything is connected.

When we give care, we receive care.

Take time to slow down.

Walk gently, speak kindly, and notice the good around you.
